

Appeal of Eve Cordier

The question to be decided is whether appellant was entitled to the renter's credit for 1976.

On March 1, 1976, appellant was a resident and tenant of a building owned by the Synanon Foundation in Santa Monica. When she filed her personal income tax return for 1976, appellant claimed the renter's credit of $37.00. Respondent initially allowed the credit but later determined that it should have been disallowed because the Synanon building was exempt from property taxation. This disallowance of the credit led to the deficiency assessment which appellant has paid.

For the year 1976, Revenue and Taxation Code section 17053.5 provided that "qualified renters" were entitled to a $37.00 credit against their personal income tax liability. Subdivision (c) of that section, however, provided that the term "qualified renter" does not include an individual who, on March 1 of the taxable year, rented and occupied premises which were exempt from property taxes. In the present case, appellant resided in a building that was exempt from property taxes. Consequently, under the explicit language of section 17053.5, subdivision (c), she was not a "qualified renter" entitled to the credit. For that reason, respondent's disallowance of the credit must be sustained.
