

1 basis method (i.e., premiums-written method) regardless of when the premiums were actually received.
2 Starting in 1998, however, petitioner commenced reporting its gross premiums using the cash basis
3 method (i.e., premiums-received method). Petitioner’s audit liability is for the difference between the 4 gross premiums tax computed on an accrual and cash basis.

5 Petitioner contends that it correctly reported taxable premiums using the gross amount of 6 premiums received, less return premiums, upon its business done in this state. Petitioner claims that it
7 is unaware of any legal basis or restrictions that prevent it from reporting premiums on a “received”
8 basis under the California Tax on Insurers Law. According to petitioner, it is only following the “plain 9 meaning of the language” in the statute and Constitution.

10 The Department of Insurance (DOI) disagrees contending that it has historically interpreted the 11 statute to impose tax on premiums written, thus requiring that tax be reported on an accrual basis.

12 DOI’s reasoning is as follows:

13 “In order for the plain meaning of ‘premiums received’ to only mean cash 14 basis, one would have to imply that ‘premiums received’ means 15 premiums received and collected and not premiums received and to be 16 received. At the moment un-present words are added to the statute, it 17 becomes very difficult to declare that the existing language has only one 18 plain meaning. Even if one could argue that it is more reasonable to 19 imply the word ‘collected,’ rather than the words ‘to be received,’ into 20 the statute, the fact that either could be implied suggests two possible
21 interpretations.”

22 In other words, DOI interprets the statute to mean that tax must be reported on premiums
23 received and premiums to be received (i.e., the premiums-written or accrual method).¹ As further 24 support, DOI points out that Insurance Code section 900 requires every insurer to file an annual 25 (financial) statement in the form and methods prescribed by the commissioner. Insurance Code section 26 923 specifically requires that the annual statement “shall be completed in conformity with the 27 Accounting Practices and Procedures Manual adopted by the National Association of Insurance 28 Commissioners” (NAIC) and that “the Commissioner may make any changes from time to time in the form of the statements and the number and method of filing reports....”

¹ Note, however, that while not conceding the case, DOI’s General Counsel has admitted to an Appeals Division staff attorney that his interpretation of the Constitution and section 12221 was consistent with petitioner’s. In other words, the DOI General Counsel has admitted that he interprets state insurance tax law as supporting the imposition of the gross premiums tax on a premiums-received or cash (not premiums-written or accrual) basis. The apparent split of opinion between DOI and its principal attorney is unexplained.

1 DOI also points out that Insurance Code section 900.2, subdivision (a), provides that the annual 2 statement that insurers are required to file must be audited by a certified public accountant in 3 accordance with the instructions adopted by NAIC and that Insurance Code section 995.5 specifically 4 states that tax shall be reported and paid by an insurer “on the basis that it has received the full 5 premium charge...less returned premiums as permitted by law.” DOI further notes that Schedule T
6 (which is included in the annual statement insurers must file) specifically refers to premiums “written”
7 or “direct premiums written,” as the basis for reporting gross premiums tax.

8 We conclude that both the Constitution and section 12221 provide that, for insurers not 9 transacting title insurance in this state, the tax applies to the net amount of premiums received each
10 year (i.e., gross premiums received less premiums returned). That is, the tax is imposed on a cash 11 basis. DOI’s reliance on Insurance Code section 995.5 is misplaced. The language in that statute is 12 specifically referring to “any contingent or retrospective compensation arrangement including policy 13 fees” as includable in gross premiums tax. In other words, unlike section 12221 which specifies that 14 the tax is due on premiums when received, Insurance Code section 995.5 addresses amounts that are 15 includable in gross premiums tax.

16 We also note from a review of DOI’s own historical records (e.g., memos, returns, etc.) that,
17 contrary to its representations to the Board, it appears that for some period of time it previously
18 imposed the tax on the insurers’ premiums-received. In other words, DOI previously taxed insurers’
19 gross premiums using the cash (not accrual) basis method. Thus, DOI had formerly taken the same 20 interpretation and cash-basis approach as petitioner.

21 Although we conclude that premiums actually received in any tax year is the appropriate
22 method for reporting gross premiums tax for that year, we are concerned that for over 30 years DOI
23 has incorrectly interpreted and applied the statute by requiring insurers to report gross premiums tax on 24 an accrual basis. At present, only 38 out of approximately 1300 insurers have attempted to utilize the 25 cash-basis method. We recognize that some accrual-basis insurers may prefer to stay on an accrual
26 basis to avoid the necessity of filing amended returns and also to avoid the cost of converting to a cash 27 basis.

1 Presumably, the accrual-basis insurers have set up their compliance systems to operate on the 2 premiums-written basis. Such compliance systems also may tie into accrual-basis reporting
3 responsibilities to other states and agencies. Given that DOI has been misinterpreting the statute for 4 many years and those insurers who might now be required to convert to cash reporting have relied on 5 DOI's misinterpretation to their detriment, we also consider whether equitable estoppel should apply to 6 avoid any detriment insurers may face if they are immediately required to convert to cash reporting,
7 both retroactively and prospectively.

8 The Board of Equalization has been recognized as a constitutional agency for resolving tax
9 disputes (Cal. Const., Art. XIII, § 17; Citicorp North America, Inc., et al. v. Franchise Tax Board
10 (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 1403, 1418). As such, the Board has exercised equitable powers in resolving tax 11 disputes, where appropriate (Appeal of Wilfred and Gertrude Winkenbach, et al., 75-SBE-081).
12 Although Article VI, section 1 of the California Constitution provides that the judicial power of this 13 state is vested in the Courts, it has long been recognized that judicial powers may be exercised by 14 administrative agencies in administrative proceedings. This includes the application of equitable 15 estoppel (Lentz v. McMahon (1989) 49 Cal.3d 393, 404-406).

16 Subject to some recognized exceptions, the estoppel doctrine may be applied against a 17 government agency under appropriate facts. (13 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2006) Equity, 18 § 199.) As it applies here, the four elements of the doctrine of estoppel are: (1) the party to be 19 estopped (DOI) must be apprised of the acts; (2) DOI must intend that its conduct shall be acted upon, 20 or must so act that the party asserting the estoppel (insurers reporting on an accrual basis) has a right to 21 believe it was so intended; (3) the insurer must be ignorant of the true state of facts; and (4) the insurer
22 must rely upon the conduct to its injury. (Strong v. County of Santa Cruz (1975) 15 Cal.3d 720, 725.)
23 Furthermore, the California courts have held that, in limited and narrow circumstances, a state
24 government agency may be subject to such estoppel, even in a matter related to taxation. (Fischbach
25 & Moore, Inc. v. State Board of Equalization (1981) 117 Cal.App.3d 627.)

26 In this case, we find that DOI both was aware and intended that insurers report tax on an 27 accrual basis because it was DOI that required them to do so. The insurers who reported on an accrual 28 basis did so based on the advice and directives of DOI. Furthermore, we find that it is likely that any

1 insurer who now might be required to convert to a cash-reporting basis will incur additional 2 administrative and accounting expenses in so doing.

3 We therefore believe that if, based upon this decision, DOI were to attempt to require any 4 accrual-reporting insurer to retroactively convert to the cash basis for any open past years, then such 5 insurer may be able to present a compelling case, at least factually, for application of an estoppel
6 against DOI. (Fischbach & Moore, Inc. v. State Board of Equalization, supra, 117 Cal.App.3d 627.)
7 Accordingly, we urge DOI not to so compel any unwilling insurer to file an amended return based 8 upon this opinion. In the interests of fairness, equity, and sound tax administration, we further urge 9 DOI not to require any unwilling insurer to convert to the cash-reporting basis in the future until such 10 time as it has promulgated administrative regulations which address the proper procedure for 11 transitioning from accrual to cash reporting, as well as all related issues, including whether or not it is 12 possible for an insurer to elect or change a prior election of an accounting method. Of course, those 13 insurers who wish to immediately convert to cash reporting or file amended returns for open past years
14 may rely upon this opinion as authority for such actions.

15 Accordingly, we find that California law requires the imposition of the gross premiums tax on 16 the premiums-received or cash basis. We, therefore, grant the petitions and allow petitioner to report 17 its gross premiums tax using the premiums-received method.
